BROOKLYN. April 21.—Mr. Fullerton resumed his cross-examination of Mr. Beecher this morning as follows. Witness said:

I saw Victoria Woodhull in June, 1871, at Mr. Tilton's. I had an interview with her there. I think this was after the publication of Mercard. I think the interview instead ten minutes. I saw her next in the autumn of 1871, about the 20th of October, I think, at the time of the yacht race.

Fullerton read a letter dated November 19, 1871, in which she desired to have an interview with him, asking justice from those who had the right to give it to her. I took this letter to Moulton, who dissuaded me from answering it, to Ohlo and to the Queen City to reclaim her son and daughter. We hope all differences as to route will be satisfactorily settled, and that all will cordinally unite in the work of uniting by railroad communication the cities of Cincinnati and Richmond.

This task of building 160 miles surely can not be considered a great work when it is remembered that previous to the great financial crash railroad building was going on in our country at the rate of 7,000 to 8,000 miles per year.

Even this short link of 160 miles that is to be built runs through a most fertile country—one abundant in resources and greatly in need of railroad communications. When this is completed you will reach an inexhaustible supply of iron and coal, and plenty of wood of all kinds for the use of your manufacturing establishments.

This enterprise in no manner conflicts with This enterprise in no manner conflicts with your great Southern road to which your city has been so liberal, and in which your people justly feel such an interest. This is a cross road reaching a different country and benefiting your city and business interests in an entirely different direction.

Mr. F. Stearns being then introduced, said: "The people of Richmond did not send me here to make a speech. After an acquaintance of thirty-eight years with me they are fully convinced that I can not do it."

I desire to say to the good people of Cincinnati that the war has been over ten years' and that your country is our country. Your flag is our flag, and you will find the people of old Virginia ready to march shoulder to shoulder with you in all the worthy enterprises you inaugurate.

We want this road built. We want your hog and hominy, and if you bring a little whisky along I guess we will purchase that too. We want speedy communication and close trade relations with you, and this enterprise will give it to us.
